

Any raised corners and causative flaring needs to be removed, although this may need to be done in stages if the flaring is excessive (Photo 9).

The real secret to regrowing a healthy hoof capsule is to maintain the correct weightbearing surface with touch up rasping no more than two weeks apart.

If there is any invading infection, mostly seen as crumbly, 'cheesy' or 'stringy' material, it needs to be opened to the outside world and topically treated with an antifungal and antibacterial agent such as tea tree oil (refer to the seedy toe article in March issue of Horses and People or visit the article's archive at www.horsesandpeople.com.au).
